

Caitlin Bristow, JD comes to Columbia University Mailman School of Public Health from Campbell & Company, a national fundraising consulting firm that works with clients to plan for and execute fundraising campaigns, build major gifts programs, and craft compelling fundraising communications. Caitlin began at Campbell & Company in 2014 as an associate consultant and quickly became a leader at the firm—at the end of her eight-year tenure, Caitlin was a vice president in the fundraising practice.

As a consultant, Caitlin partnered with education clients across the country to lead campaigns ranging from $10 million to $750 million. She has experience working with nonprofit leaders to secure 7- and 8- figure gifts and enjoys working closely with volunteer leaders to achieve fundraising goals. Caitlin served as Columbia Mailman’s campaign consultant for ten months before joining the team full-time as the assistant dean for development.

Caitlin is a mom of two girls, Neala (4) and Fiona (2), and lives with her husband in Wilton, Connecticut where they recently relocated from Boston. She enjoys reading, yoga, and spending time with her family (which means traveling all over the country)! She is a proud graduate of the College of the Holy Cross and Saint Louis University School of Law.